Table notes

Although the headline ranking figures show the changes in the survey year to year, the pattern of clustering among the schools is also significant. A total of 210 points separate the top school from the school at number 100 in the ranking. The top 10 schools, from the London Business School and University of Pennsylvania: Wharton to Iese Business School, form the leading group of world-class business schools. A total of 41 points separate LBS and Wharton from Iese. The second group is headed by the Indian Institute of Management, -Ahmedabad, which scored 69 points more than Lancaster University Management School, leader of the third group. The fourth group, which includes schools ranked from number 74 to 100, is headed by Purdue University: Krannert and University of Strathclyde Business School. □□
